Placing an attractive professional-looking ad in Homes & Land Magazine is now easier than ever with our exclusive Online AdMaker program, a Web based program that allows you to easily submit your ad to Homes & Land Magazine.

Online AdMaker makes organizing content for your ad simple. You simply create an electronic “folder,” then add photos and text for your listings.

Don’t worry if you can’t complete your ad in one sitting Online AdMaker is always available anywhere from your Web browser. You can leave when you need to, then log in again later to complete your ad.

Benefits

- Easy to use.
- Work anytime, anywhere; all you need is an Internet connection.
- Send your digital photos online.
- Online AdMaker will store your ad so you can work on it a little at a time, until you are ready to submit it to your Homes & Land Publisher.

How to Use Online AdMaker:

1. Log in

- Go to admaker.homesandland.com.
- Enter your user name and password and click the Sign On button.
- Select the OAM tab or click the Create your Ad via OAM link located under the tabs on your welcome page.

Understanding Digital Cameras And How to Submit Digital Photos

If you are going to submit digital photo images for use in a high quality publication such as Homes & Land Magazine, please consider the following information when purchasing and using a digital camera.

Effective Pixels

Digital cameras capture light as millions of tiny pixels and are measured in "mega-pixels" (one mega pixel = one million pixels.) Effective pixels is a count of the mega-pixels that are actually used to take a picture. The higher this number, the finer the resolution, the better the quality. The cameras best suited for the type of images needed for Homes & Land magazines have the ability to capture 3 or more mega-pixels.

Resolution

Resolution is a term used to describe the quality of an image. It refers to the average number of pixels that exist in an inch of the image. As an example, an image that will only be used to display on screen, such as a Web site, is usually 72dpi (dots per inch). If your photo is going to be printed in Homes & Land Magazine, it must be at least 300dpi. Insufficient resolution is the most common problem with digital camera photos. Your digital camera probably has more than one resolution or "quality" setting to choose from. The least resolution setting will allow for maximum photos captured but the poorest quality image. Higher resolution settings allow for the fewest number of photos but the highest photo reproduction quality.

See the section under "Images Uploaded for Online AdMaker" on page 14 for examples of how many pixels your photo must have, in order to print at a specific size. It is always better to choose a setting that captures too many pixels rather than not enough.

Memory or Storage Media

All digital cameras have some type of removable, reusable memory. The more memory storage (in mega bytes or MB) the camera has, the more pictures it can hold. Some cameras use standard floppy diskettes while others use memory sticks, Smart Media cards, compact flash cards or mini CD/R's or CD/RW. One advantage to the CD type memory, besides the fact that it holds 156MB, is that it can be taken out of your camera and plugged into any computer that has a standard CD or DVD drive to download your images with no other software needed.

Optical Zoom vs. Digital Zoom

Optical zoom offers clear sharp zoom-in for close up images. Digital zoom simulates the zoom-in image with a process called interpolation which adds nonexistent pixels to the image and results in a degraded image quality.

Color LCD

Most cameras include a built in color view screen that lets you frame your shots as well as see images you've already taken. Many cameras also have a traditional optical view finder which is a great way to save batteries (the LCD viewer eats batteries) or to shoot images in bright light where the LCD isn't as vivid.

USB Interface

Most cameras have USB interfaces and cables for transferring images to your computer. This is typically a slow way to transfer images. Some cameras come with a device to speed up that transfer such as an "Image Mate." This device allows you to put your memory card into it and then transfer images to your computer at a fraction of the time compared to a USB cable transfer. Some cameras have "docking stations" that allow you to set your camera into a device that transfers images quickly to your computer.

Rechargeable Batteries

Some cameras come with a rechargeable battery system. You may also be able to replace your camera's batteries with over-the-counter rechargeable batteries. Rechargeable batteries are more expensive than standard alkaline batteries but in the long run will save you money.

Images Uploaded To Online AdMaker

Important Note: If you are going to upload an image, it must be saved in a jpeg file format and must be at a size that is relative to the size the photo will be in the magazine (see examples on the following page). As magazine photo images get larger the size of the submitted photo image file must increase accordingly. Your photo will also need to be renamed. Your camera will automatically name your image in a numerical sequence, so when you download your photo to your computer, you must rename that photo to your name and listing address. As an example: "smith2709belmont." This will assure that your image is easily identified and dropped into the correct location in the magazine.

Examples of pixels needed for specific photo sizes:

Note: It is important that you consult your camera owner's manual to achieve the desired results listed below.

- If your photo is to print at 2" wide x 1" high, your image must be at least 640 x 480 pixels.
- If your photo is to print at 3" wide x 2" high, your image must be at least 1024 x 768 pixels.
- If your photo is to print at 5" wide x 4" high, your image must be at least 1600 x 1200 pixels.
- If your photo is to print at 7" wide x 5" high, your image must be at least 2272 x 1704 pixels.

Below is an example of how both a 300 dpi and a 72 dpi image compare when printed.

Acceptable

Image at 300 dpi or 640 x 480 pixels

Unacceptable

Image at 72 dpi or 154 x 115 pixels
